About Jackson, Mississippi

Jackson is the capital of and the most populous city in the state. The city is also one of two county seats of Hinds County. The city itself has a population of approximately 150,000. Jackson is the anchor for the Jackson metropolitan statistical area, the largest metropolitan area completely within the state and the 10th largest urban area in the Deep South. With a 2020 population estimated at around 600,000, metropolitan Jackson is home to over one-fifth of Mississippi's population. The city sits on the Pearl River among three adjoining counties offering the region's best and most numerous offerings in schools, communities, health care, and recreational activities.

Founded in 1821 as the site for a new state capital, the city is named after General Andrew Jackson, who was honored for his role in the Battle of New Orleans during the War of 1812 and later served as U.S. president.

Today, the largest metro area in Mississippi is leading the charge for the state's arts, culinary and cultural progression. Compared with other similarly sized metro areas, Jackson is very affordable. The median home sale price is significantly lower than the national median, and Jackson residents pay less for groceries, utilities, and transportation than those living in other large urban areas.
